Here's an unusual sight at the Excelsior Streetcar Line – four streetcars in the yard. This photo is from May of 2019 when Fargo-Moorhead No. 28 (first car on the left) was moved temporarily to Excelsior from storage near Mankato. As you can see, the car needs a lot of restoration before riding the rails again. Fargo-Moorhead No. 28 is a single truck Birney Safety Car. During the period from World War I through the 1940s, it was the standard small city streetcar. It was lightweight to save electricity and designed to be run by a motorman alone, eliminating the expense of a conductor. Also pictured is Duluth Street Railway No. 78, Duluth Street Railway No. 265, and in the forefront, Winona Power & Light Co. No. 10. That's a great sampling of Minnesota Streetcars. BILL THE MOTORMAN SEZ

Unlike other streetcar systems, Twin City Lines didn't use numbers to identify lines. They took their names from a street or location along each route -- like Como and Harriet. It takes getting used to, but if you get stuck you can always ask a Motorman or a fellow rider to get you back on track.
